

TYPES OF CHARACTERS

PROTAGONIST

The word "protagonist" comes from a Greek word that means "chief actor" in a Greek drama. In literature, the protagonist is the central character of the story, where the plot revolves around the protagonist.

ANTAGONIST

In literature, the antagonist is the opposite of the protagonist in the story. Antagonists are usually portrayed as the villains in stories where the protagonists must face and defeat them.

FLAT CHARACTER

Flat characters are usually considered secondary characters because they lack depth and origin in the story. Flat characters have minimal roles and they usually remain unchanged throughout the course of the story.

ROUND CHARACTER

The round characters are the opposite of the flat characters. These characters have more facets in terms of personality, making them more real as they undergo changes throughout the story.

DYNAMIC CHARACTER

Dynamic characters are characters that embody change. They are the characters that experience inner change within the story. These changes may occur because of the actions of other characters in the plot of the story.
